WORKING TOGETHER – BUT HOW?

We remark a suspicion: Interkultur in Germany often still seems to be driven by self-conceptions of a donor country. Cultural offerings that refer to the field Interkultur are often subordinated to ideas of integration that arise in day-to-day politics – at the same time they are conceived as independent artistic or sociocultural attempts. Initiators often do not work together but make an offer to „the others“.

These offers and projects are often shaped by the feeling of mutual appreciation, respect and eye level. But frequently, there is a gap between the standard of working together and the exercise of doing something for somebody. We want to discuss with you in three topical workshops about “working together” in the intercultural field – to discuss, to listen to each other, to work together.

How much participation is really contained in participatory projects? How can people be appropriately rewarded who are involved in projects and on the other hand depend on social service? Is cultural project work a professional perspective for precarious existences? Which are the aims and tasks of intercultural cooperation?

The third network meeting is dedicated to these questions in short keynotes and three moderated workshop groups on the topics “participation / working together”, “salary / administration” and “aims and tasks / art as subversive practice”
